Directions:
Archaeologists study artifacts (things people made, used, or changed) to learn about a group's culture (the shared, learned behavior practiced among a group of people). Today, you will be an archaeologist! Look at the artifact before you. Study it. What can it tell you about the people that made it and used it? Write your findings below.

Ask yourself:

What is it made of? How do you think it was made?
What might it have been used for? What modern object does it remind you of?
